The current version of Photoshop is Photoshop CS5, which was released in September 2011. It adds several important new features, including a new pen tool called the Pointer, a new ability to use brush strokes for drawing, and a new plug-in called Alchemy that adds power for working with vectors. For an overview of the new features in Photoshop CS5, check out Chapter 5. Getting Started with Photoshop Photoshop allows you to perform sophisticated image manipulations to your own images in just about any way imaginable. Whether you want to sharpen an image, remove a distracting object, change the color and/or tone of an image, or create complex collages, you can do it. Photoshop has been the industry standard tool for image manipulation for so long that its name has become synonymous with image editing. With Photoshop, you can open and edit all the different kinds of files you need to work with. Your files may include TIFF (Tagged Image File Format), JPEG, or PNG (Portable Network Graphics) images (which are ideal for web use), or they may be traditional raster (pixel-based) images or vector (non-pixel based) graphics. In addition, Photoshop includes one of the best image-viewing and organization programs available for your computer. Photoshop Organizer enables you to view, sort, and group up to 30 images at a time in a thumbnail view, so you can see at a glance a variety of images saved by different people and in different files. To take advantage of Photoshop's many editing tools, you need to understand the basic components of an image. Photoshop's layered approach to image editing is based on a philosophy of creating a combination of layers that can be kept separate and then brought together in numerous ways to make any kind of image alteration. A layer is simply a collection of a number of individual raster-based images that are put together in some form or another to make up a final image. Layers can be visualized by Photoshop as having a transparent background with objects layered on top. Photoshop's tools enable you to move, resize, or resize and move objects on different layers. For example, the selection tool enables you to manipulate objects in your image by using a brush stroke and a marquee, making it possible to easily select an object and quickly manipulate it by moving it, enlarging it, reducing it, or even using an eraser to remove that object. The same concept applies when you modify a selection

32 Mich. App. 310 (1971) 189 N.W.2d 184 PEOPLE v. DENNIS Docket No. 7470. Michigan Court of Appeals. Decided May 25, 1971. Leave to appeal granted June 26, 1971. Frank J. Kelley, Attorney General, Robert A. Derengoski, Solicitor General, Peter E. Deegan, Prosecuting Attorney, and Donald A. Kuebler, Chief Assistant Prosecuting Attorney, for the people. Carr, Saxner & Sable, for defendant on appeal. Before: HOLBROOK, P.J., and BASHARA and O'HARA,[*] JJ. Leave to appeal granted June 26, 1971. 384 Mich 765. O'HARA, J. Defendant's jury trial ended with a conviction of attempted breaking and entering a building, MCLA § 750.92 (Stat Ann 1970 Cum Supp § 28.287), but the trial court sentenced him to two years' probation for the offense. The attempted offense was done for the purpose of receiving money the defendant had stolen from his co-defendant after the two had engaged in a fight that prompted the defendant to steal the money from his co-defendant. The defendant-appellant argues that he was improperly charged under MCLA § 750.92 (Stat Ann 1970 Cum Supp § 28.287). This section makes it unlawful to *312 enter any building without the consent of the owner "with intent to commit a felony or larceny therein". He contends that the reference to "felony or larceny" in the "attempted" statute means that a completely completed intent to commit a felony must be formed in the mind at the time of entry into the building and that a hasty retreat at the moment before the actual committing of the felony would not violate the statute. This interpretation of the statute was rejected in People v. Favelly (1969), 13 Mich App 441. The Court in Favelly, after reviewing the legislative history of the statute and reading the statute as a whole, held that while MCLA § 750.92 must be given a liberal construction, if it read exactly as stated, the statute would be unconstitutional in violation of due process and equal protection, as well as being vague and indefinite in violation of the rule against unnecessary and impracticable regulations of the police power. The Court, at

This invention relates to spray mops and particularly to a novel handle for a mop and a different and less objectionable form of attachment for the ends of the mop which enables the mop to be easily bent to the desired shape. Heretofore a mop has generally included a handle in which the sides of the handle include formed therein so as to hold the mop handle ends to a flat surface. However, by reason of the structure of the mop and the known design of the mop end attachment structure, it has been somewhat difficult and often frustrating to the user to bend the mop into the desired shape. This problem has been particularly encountered in bent portion mops in which the water permeable sheet material includes bent portions which generally means bending of the soiled portion of the sheet material. Because of the prior construction of mop sheets and attachment of the mop ends, it has been cumbersome and difficult to bend the sheet material to enable the bent portions to be cleaned. In accordance with the mop of this invention, however, the width of the belt portion of the mop is selected to permit the edge of the mop belt to be moved onto the edge of a spout portion or if desired over the edge of the spout and into a conveying portion of the spout for the further bending of the sheet material. Consequently, the mop of this invention is capable of being easily bent without strain to the extent that the mop sheet material is capable of being bent easily. Thus, the mop of this invention not only permits the mop to be easily bent without strain but also allows the mop to be bent in the desired shape after the mop has been used to clean a surface and then bent again for use in another location. In addition, since the user can easily grasp the mop in any shape and thereby extend the usefulness of the mop, the user of the mop becomes more familiar with the use of the mop and feels more satisfaction with the use thereof than if the mop is in a relatively straight shape. The mop of this invention further includes a handle so constructed that it is easy to grasp and can easily be held in a desired location for maximum convenience. A tensioning element in the handle has a side which slides into a slot formed in the main body of the handle and the opposite side includes a projection which can be inserted into the slot so as to hold the handle in the desired location. The tensioning member includes a flange on the
